The action of this RING HENRY IV.

The action of this RING commences at an interesting period of English history. Henry IV., declining into the value of years, broken with stokeness, agitated with remorae, resolves to explate the mayder of his sovereign, Richard II., by a crusate to the Holy Land. From this resolution he is, nowever, diverted, by the sudden incursion of the Weish, under Owen-cliendower, and the revot of some of his principal nobility, particularly the powerful house of Northumberland, at the head of whom is Harry Forcy, the renownest Hotspur. From these seventies are the tragic incidents of the drama, while head of whom is the tragic incidents of the drama; while the seventies of the tragic incidents of the drama; while Roar's Head—those "minions of the moon"—Folms, Feto, Gaudelli, Rardooph and the inminishe FALSTA Bardooph and the inminishe FALSTA Bardooph and the supported by

Read what the New York press say:

Tammany offers so many inducements for the present weak that to attempt to enumerate them or to speak of their merits would occupy more time and space than is at our command. Suffice it to say, therefore, that the programme at the great Wigwam is one of unusual creellance. Such entertainents than larger and since set han the drama, as is attested by the crowded audiences.—New York Heraid.
The Tammany theaten now offers an entertainment which for variety and interest has rarely been excelled. The houses are nightly crowded to their utmost cap acity. The feature of the performances to of course, the remarkably successful doings of the Hanions, who so interpolity and brilliancy of operations are greeted with the most encouraging commendations are greeted with the most hazardous feats and beats his parents, the Hanions, allogether at their business.—Star, Nov. 17, 1868.

Those who are in quest of a place in which to while away an hour or two pleasantily should wist the great TAMMANY. The audiences are house-filling and the attractions many, varied and brilliant.—Adas.
